that import requirements would greatly exceed 30,000,000 bush, and possibly 60,000,000 bush. Indeed there was one as high as 96,000,000 bush, but this was generally discredited, as it would suggest a loss in the French crop of over 100,000,000 bush.

In the local corn market matters were almost at a standstill but there was a slightly weaker undertone, mainly in sympathy with the West. At the outset there was a sharp fall in Western markets, as crop prospects were considered brighter, owing to a moderate rainfall over a fairly wide area of corn territory. It was also stated that the recent rains had made farmers more willing to part with their reserves. Hence deliveries to country stations were represented to be bigger. Late in the session offerings were lighter, and with short sellers inclined to cover most of the decline was recovered. Buying was partly accelerated by the sharp rise in wheat THE CORN BITUATION.
